

SEAFORD GAZETTE

11. 10. 06

What are they doing to our coastline?

IF SEAFORD beach was as it is now around the 1066 mark and the Normans had chosen the area as the place to land, the Battle of Hastings would never have taken place and old Harold would never have got the arrow in his eye! The reason?

Well, for starters they would have had difficulties climbing the beach and if they did traverse it they would have to clamber over the campervans that seem to permanently inhabit the seafront.

Of course they could have gone along to Exceat to land, but better hurry up with the invasion or they will be up to their necks in mud when it is flooded.

That could happen overnight while Seaford sleeps once the diggers move in and do their worst - then it is too late.

What are they doing to our beautiful coastline? I dread to think what will happen next. What must Bonningstedt, our twin town, think of pot holes on the prom and our downtrodden air. It's all gone to pot.

— P MATTHEWS, Hammond Avenue, Seaford.